HELPING CHILDREN THROUGH RESEARCH

The Dorrance Family Foundation knows from experience the vital role proper nutrition plays in the health of a growing child—and the pain and frustration families face when their child suffers from digestion problems that may cause nutritional deficiencies. That's why they created the "Dorrance Endowed Fellowship in Pediatric Gastroenterology and Nutrition" at The University of Arizona Steele Children's Research Center.

The fellowship was established in honor of Steele Center director Dr. Faye K. Ghishan, an internationally-acclaimed pediatric gastroenterologist who has made ground-breaking discoveries that have helped countless children around the world. The Dorrance fellowship enables the Steele Center to train the next generation of pediatric gastroenterology investigators. Rajalakshmy "Raji" Ramalingam is the first Dorrance Fellow and she is dedicated to discover new ways to improve the lives of all children suffering from painful gastrointestinal and nutritional disorders.
